

Prior to the enactment of the Indiana Telephone Privacy Bill, I would receive as many as eight unsolicited phone calls per day. The incessant pandering of credit card and loan companies, such as those represented by the Comsumer Bankers Association (CBA), lowered my quality of life and placed my entire family under undue psychological duress. Those who are interested in obtaining services offered by CBA memebbers will seek them independently. You will not find a voting Indiana resident, protected by this law, who would support a change allowing a resumed telephonic molestation. change to our law
